Historical Note

The Republican National Convention is the official nominating convention, held every four years of the Republican Party. It was held within the Exposition Hall in Chicago, Illinois from June 19-25, 1888. Benjamin Harrison, a former senator from Indianapolis, Indiana, was nominated president, and Levi P. Morton, a former United States representative of New York, for vice president. Speakers included Frederick Douglass and John Charles Fremont, a candidate for president in 1856.
